CALHOUN, JACKSON, AND NATIONAL GOVERNMENT. In 1811, John C. Calhoun of South Carolina, a young man not of the age of thirty years, took his seat as a member of the national House of Representatives, and at once became a leader in public affairs. He was one of the Committee on Foreign Relations. On the 12th of December he said what was the road the nation should tread to make it great and to produce in this country not the form but the real spirit of union. 1 In March, 1815, he voted for a high tariff and said: He believed the policy of the country required protection to our manufacturing establishments. a He also reported the bill to incorporate a United States Bank, and supported it in a speech on its constitutionality. Webster, on the contrary, opposed the tariff bills, not however on the ground of their unconstitutionality. In December, 1816, Calhoun moved that a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of setting apart a permanent fund for internal improvement ; on December 23d, he reported a bill setting aside the bonus paid by the United States Bank, $1,500,000 and future dividends from bank stock, as a fund for constructing roads and canals. In his speech supporting it he said: that the extent of our republic exposes us to the greatest of all calamities, next to the loss of liberty, and even to that in its consequences, disunion....
